'Today, I proudly display the tricolour'

Independence Day just passed by but for me, it's Independence Day everyday. I have always been inspired by the National Flag. And at long last, we Indians have got the right to display our national flag at all times. Till a few months ago, only VIPs, government offices and public sector undertakings had the honour of displaying the flag on their premises. The rest of India could fly the Tricolour only on days like Independence Day

Executive Vice-President, Jindal Steel & Power Limited
On his seven-year battle to get Indians the right to fly their national flag on all days and Republic Day.

After a seven-year long legal battle, early this year, we Indians got the right to fly our flag on all days. Naturally, I'm delighted. For me it all started, when in the early 90's, I was in the United States studying for a master's degree in business management at the University of Texas. A friend of mine gifted me the Indian National Flag. I felt great when I held it in my hands. It was a different feeling altogether.

Ironically, though, while I could proudly display my country's flag in the US, I wasn't allowed to do so here. In fact, on January 26, 1993, I remember hoisting the flag at our Raigarh factory. But the next day, it was no longer there because I was told that the flag could not be displayed everyday. I found it absurd that in a Republic, people were not allowed to display the flag freely. That marked the beginning of a battle which today, thankfully, has paid off.

The fear that the Flag could be disrespected is baseless. Why should a person who has made the effort of procuring the national flag disrespect it? Isn't it his flag as well? Isn't it his country? It's his pride, too. Besides, just as people take care of their religious epics they will take certainly take care of the tricolour.

Today, I proudly display the tricolour at various places in my office and at home. It's a wonderful feeling, very inspiring. I hope more and more people do it.
