into consideration the report on fundamental rights, Sardar Patel said:

When the committee sat down to consider the fundamental rights to be incorporated in the constitution, it had decided that these should be divided into two parts—justiciable and non-justiciable.

Even while considering the first part, the committee had come to the conclusion that it could not come to find decisions as to all the fundamental rights to be incorporated the constitution. Considering the another constitution, consideration of the reports and the decisions as to all the fundamental rights of the consideration of the reports and the drafting of the constitution, points might arise for suggesting additional fundamental rights or making minor alterations or suggestions. The report being presented today was, therefore, only a preliminary one.

APPEAL TO MEMBERS

In considering the report. Sardar Patel urged the Assembly not to devote too much time to the wording of each clause. Certain changes might be necessary when the clauses were being legally drafted and these might as well be left over to the Drafting Committee. However, the considering technical and legal details.

The report presented today only dealt with justiciable rights. The committee itself had not been able to consider unjustic ble rights.
